Meet the candidates

An all candidate's meeting will take place tonight (Monday) at the Dysart Community Centre at 7:30 p.m. All five local candidates in this provincial election have been invited.

Candidates will be asked four of six potential questions on the environment, the promised chronic care beds, Martin Lumber, municipal funding, legislative role or tourism.

Four selected delegates will each ask the candidates one question and then questions will be allowed from the floor. HHSS principal Peter Forgrave will moderate the meeting which is sponsored by The Haliburton County Echo.

The Times office will be closed Sept. 3. The next edition will be in stores and at the post offices on Tuesday, Sept. 4.

OPP Constable Rob Orlowski saved an unconscious man from a burning home last week. The off-duty officer dragged the victim from inside the house, putting his own life at risk to do so.

Officer braves smoke, fire to rescue his neighbour

by Carol Moffatt

An off-duty OPP officer is credited with saving the life of a man lying unconscious on the floor of his burning home.

Constable Rob Orlowski and his wife Rochelle noticed smoke at the back of neighbour Richard Milewski's Mistivale Trail home around 7 p.m. Monday evening. At first glance "it looked like he was having trouble with his barbecue," said Rochelle, because the smoke wasn't the thick black smoke usually associated with fire.

However, when Orlowski looked out the window a few minutes later he saw smoke coming from the side of the house and decided to take a look. He went around the back of the house and "saw fire coming out of the kitchen window," he said.

He called back to his wife to phone the fire department and then went up the stairs to the deck. "There was fire from the window and the eavestrough. The (kitchen) window was warm and the door was hot," he said.

He went further along the deck to a sliding screen door that was open but couldn't see anything through the thick smoke inside the house. Knowing Milewski was home, Orlowski called out to find him and, receiving no answer, stepped into the burning house.

"I stayed low, below the smoke like they always tell you, and as soon as I went in I saw (Milewski's) arm. I shook him and yelled at him but I got no response," said Orlowski. Not wanting to stand up in the thick smoke, he dragged the unconscious Milewski from the house.

Orlowski said once he had Milewski on the deck, he could see his face was a bluish color. "I tried to take his pulse and then I shook him. He took a breath and then I rolled him over," said Orlowski.

By this time, said Orlowski, the fire was bigger. "She was hot... there was fire coming out of the window pretty good." He carried Milewski to the front of the house by which time the entire roof was engulfed in flames.

Orlowski didn't think twice about going to the aid of his neighbour. "You know you're not supposed to go into a (burning) house, but I didn't even think about it," he said. "But I wouldn't have

Community endorses plans for Minden arena expansion

The proposal to expand Minden's arena and community centre was met with strong support Wednesday, when the matter was put to the public.

While there were differing opinions on some aspects of this project, most at this first public meeting agreed an expansion is in order.

Preliminary plans for the project have already been drawn up Robert McEwen and Associates. The drawings for the two additions were posted along the wall of the community centre for everyone to look at. The engineers and Minden councillors often referred to these plans during the presentation to the more than 75 people in the audience.

The plans for the community centre call for a 40-by-80-foot addition to be added to the back of the hall. Because of the sloping terrain of the property behind the hall, the addition will include a basement.

The plans also call for a 208-by-25-foot addition along the north side of the arena to provide more dressing rooms and storage rooms.

Reeve Ray Moore opened the meeting by telling the crowd that council has spent "many long hours deliberating the needs" of the community. He said this meeting was called in order to gain additional insight from the public.

"We want you to be a part of the project," said the Reeve. "We need support from the users," he said.

The meeting was also designed to recruit volunteers to sit on the two committees that will be formed to co-ordinate this project. A fundraising committee is being established, as is a building committee. Although several have offered their help, council is still looking for more members.

Moore said the municipality is almost free of the debt derived from the 1973 arena construction. The township has accumulated $360,000 in reserves and cash, which he said will cover about half the cost of this new project.

Moore estimates that the two expansions will cost somewhere from $615,000 to $750,000. The Minden Rotary Club has already promised to donate $100,000

Tory leader Mike Harris came to Lindsay last Wednesday, where he gave a fiery speech in support of local candidate Ron Jenkins to a large group of supporters. Touching on local issues, Harris criticized the Liberal government for reneging on its promise to expand the Haliburton Hospital. He also criticized the restructuring of county government, saying amalgamation steals from an area's heritage. His main focus, though, was rising taxes, which he says have been mismanaged by the

First meeting offers forum but no fireworks

by Jay Kerr-Wilson

The first local candidate's meeting in this provincial election provided a much needed forum for the three newest candidates, but offered little in the way of fireworks.

The meeting was held in Bobcaygeon last Wednesday and was attended by four of the six contenders for the position of MPP in Victoria-Haliburton.

Neither Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly nor Conservative candidate Ron Jenkins was in attendance.

The absence of the two candidates was not overlooked by moderator Tom Nye who suggested that two empty chairs be placed at the front of the room, "for absent friends."

NDP candidate Dennis Drainville took up the attack on Jenkins and O'Reilly in his opening comments.

"The fact that we do not have the presence of the Liberal or Conservative candidates just shows the disdain they hold for the electorate," he said. "I wish they were here so we could hear their views and their policies."

Drainville spoke on a subject which has been a consistent theme in his campaign, the need for an open, honest government in the province.

He also attacked the Liberal government for calling a "needless" election just three years into their term.

Premier David Peterson called the election for two reasons, said Drainville. The first reason is because the trial of Patti Starr, a former Liberal fundraiser, is set to start in early September and Drainville said Peterson wants the election over with before details of the scandal are made public.

The other reason Drainville said the Liberals called an early election is to avoid having to fight a campaign during the economic recession which has been widely predicted for next year.

He criticized the Liberals for their spree of election promises which he called "too costly" and said "lacked honesty."

"We can't accept promises that are made day, after day, after day," he said. "The Liberals can't buy the votes of the populace anymore."

On the issue of the environment, Drainville said the province needs strong environmental protection legislation. Noting that the average fine to corporate polluters is only about $6,000, Drainville said for large businesses that amount lets them carry on "business as usual."

There is a need to levy fines against cottage and home owners with faulty septic systems, said Drainville, and residences should be closed until problems are corrected.

He also expressed concern about the environmental damage caused by large boats on small lakes and snowmobiles, both of which deposit oil in lake water and promote the growth of algae.

The next candidate to speak was Fenelon resident Hugh Boyd who is running as an independent.

Boyd said he's chosen to run as an independent candidate because he can't follow any of the established political parties.

"A party has a party line and you can't step on any toes," said Boyd. He said he wants to give the riding a politician they can believe in.

By following in the footsteps of retiring Liberal MPP John Eakins and Conservative MP Bill Scott, Boyd said he'll be "more than a political man" and represent everyone in the riding.

Among the issues that concern him,

Boyd said he's worried about the future of senior citizens in the province and feels the streets are no longer safe, partly because of the Young Offenders Act.

Cameron resident Brad Medd is running on behalf of the Family Coalition Party. In his opening statement Medd said voters get a lot of statistics thrown at them during election campaigns and they want to hear something fresh and innovative.

Medd mentioned the orange, blue and red campaign signs which are appearing on lawns and roadsides all over the riding and said they were all paid for with taxpayers' money.

When the Family Coalition Party begins putting up signs, "they won't cost you a dime," Medd told the audience.

He said he's a "capitalist at heart" who supports free enterprise and wants to see the profit motive returned to Ontario business, "but with social responsibility."

Libertarian candidate Ron Hawkrigg stated his party's goal; less government and lower taxes.

"We feel you're entitled to more than 48 per cent of your paycheck," said Hawkrigg. "Taxation destroys the economy. The only way to get a healthy economy is to get the government out of our pockets."

The Liberals will talk about the balanced budget during the campaign, said Hawkrigg, but no one ever talks about the deficit. "If you don't get rid of the deficit, you haven't balanced anything."

The first question posed by the

to the project and Moore hopes the rest can be raised through grants and a local fundraising drive.

"I feel that with an enthusiastic response, we will be able to do this without a debenture," said the reeve. He noted that donations to the fund are tax deductible and encouraged everyone to chip in.

While no one in the audience spoke out against the concept, some felt the design should be altered.

Representing the Coboconk Islanders, George Simmons suggested that windows should be installed in the community-centre overlooking the arena. The Islanders put on a tournament at the Minden arena each winter and Simmons feels the windows would be a benefit for such events.

Robert McEwen the engineers had considered installing windows, but it was decided not to put them into the plans for various reasons. Windows would be costly and difficult to clean, said McEwen. He said they might also be unsuitable for certain functions at the hall.

Although windows are not included in the preliminary plans, McEwen said no one has ruled out the idea. He said it will be up to the building committee to decide.

Although a show of hands demonstrated that most favour the installation of windows, arena employee Wally Mysyk cautioned that the community centre will not be open at all times. He said the arena and community centre are two separate identities. The community centre will "not be open for people to come and go at their pleasure."

Minden resident and former township councillor Verne Graham noted that an expansion was proposed five years ago. However, when council realized the cost of the project, the idea was abandoned.

Graham said the earlier proposal for the community centre would have created a facility capable of housing a summer theatre. It included a proper stage with dressing rooms attached—something that should again be considered, he said.

While Graham noted that it will cost more than $1-million to develop this sort of facility, he said it would be a great benefit to the community to have a place for summer theatre.

Gary Warburton said he is in favour of the project, but argued that conditions at the existing arena facility should first be improved. He said the entire ice surface should be surrounded by glass to protect the players and fans at hockey games.

Warburton also commented on the value of an arena to the community. For many, an arena is the first impression people get of a community, he said.

While some believe an arena should be a profit-making facility, Warburton says that should not be a prime consideration. "You show me a town without an arena and I'll show you a town with a high crime rate," he said.

Another concern raised during the meeting involves the shape of the community centre under the current plans. Wayne Cox noted that a long, narrow building is being proposed, which would be awkward for some functions. He said it might be better to expand the width of the building, rather than extending the length.

McEwen said that has been considered, but said the structures support beams would be in the way. He said the hall can be widened, but the pillars would have to remain in place. He said this could be reconsidered if the building committee feels that is the best route.

Drainville finds voters confused over parties, issues

by Jay Kerr-Wilson

Many voters in Victoria-Haliburton are disillusioned and confused when trying to decide who to vote for in the upcoming provincial election, says NDP candidate Dennis Drainville.

Drainville has spent most of the campaign going door-to-door in communities throughout the riding, and he says many of the people he's met have been turned off the entire political process.

Last Wednesday, after signing his nomination papers at the returning office in Lindsay, Drainville canvassed one neighbourhood looking for support.

"I'm befuddled," said one woman after accepting one of Drainville's pamphlets. "It doesn't seem to matter who you vote for, when they get in there they do what they want."

Drainville suggested the woman attend one of the debates being held in the area to help her sort out the platforms of the various candidates and their parties.

The woman said she knows people who are either not going to vote at all or will end up voting for a party they don't believe in. She blamed the public's cynicism on the recent performance of the federal government. "(Prime Minister) Mulroney has sickened everybody," she said. She intends to cast her vote but said she's still unsure which way she'll go.

"That's the normal response I'm getting from the people I meet," Drainville said as he walked to the next door. "People are dissatisfied with the status quo and don't know where to turn."

Drainville varies his approach depending on how he reads the person who answers the door. He says there are normally three types of responses he gets when canvassing a residential neighbourhood.

Some people answer the door and politely accept his pamphlet but don't seem very interested in discussing issues. With these people Drainville says he goes through the motions of introducing himself but doesn't spend much time trying to strike up a conversation.

The second type of response is from people who maintain eye contact and seem generally interested in the candidate's message. Drainville tries to draw these people out by asking their opinions on the issues.

The third type of response is from people who actively engage the candidate in conversation and question the policies of the party.

"The last group is the best," says Drainville.

Ever since his campaign began, Drain-

Jenkins visits Haliburton seniors on campaign trail

by Jay Kerr-Wilson

Conservative candidate Ron Jenkins derives satisfaction from his efforts on the campaign trail that go beyond asking for support in the upcoming election.

Jenkins was in Haliburton village last Monday and spent the morning visiting residents at the two seniors apartments and the Extendicare nursing home.

Throughout his visit to Extendicare, Jenkins was aware how much it meant to the residents that he stopped to chat.

"These people really appreciate the fact that you stop and talk with them and let them know they count," he said.

As he went door-to-door in the seniors apartment buildings, accompanied by his wife Tanis, Jenkins was not confronted with many campaign issues.

But his visits took on a very personal nature as Jenkins, a lifetime resident of Little Britain, found you don't have to go very far back in family history to come up with a common acquaintance or family friend.

And his involvement in minor hockey in the area has brought him into contact with people from all over Victoria-Haliburton, contacts that are proving useful at election time.

Jenkins' day began at 9:30 a.m. at the Mountain View apartments, with Haliburton resident Jane Johnson providing introductions.

One woman expressed concern about the fact that the two-storey apartment building has no elevator. She said she hasn't left the building in six months because she is no longer able to negotiate the stairs.

These concerns were echoed by building superintendent Ron Bacon who approached Jenkins at the entrance to the building.

Jenkins said elevators should have been part of the building's original design or that ramps, instead of stairs,

O'Reilly's approachable nature makes him popular

If nice guys finish last, Pat O'Reilly will be at the bottom of the polls come election day.

The Liberal candidate's casual style, easy humour and approachable nature have clearly made him a popular man in the Lindsay area.

Sporting a plaid shirt and casual slacks, O'Reilly was campaigning door to door in downtown Lindsay last Wednesday morning. He barely covered two blocks in over an hour, though, as store owners, employees, shoppers and passers-by pulled him aside to chat.

Some took the opportunity to chat about baseball. Others talked about their vacations, and still others discussed mutual friends or relatives. Not once was O'Reilly challenged to address any of the issues. It was more of a social stroll through the town than hard campaigning.

If Wednesday's walk is any indication, O'Reilly—or Patty as he is better known—owns the hearts of many voters in the Lindsay area. Whether or not this personal popularity translates into votes remains to be seen.

An elderly man seated at one of the benches in the Kent Plaza called to O'Reilly when he first came into the building. "Someone asked me 'What's Patty up to now?'" the man said. He continued with a wide grin: "I told him he's on his way to Queen's Park."

O'Reilly, a fourth generation farmer from Ops Township, is a familiar face in the southern part of this riding. He now works as a real estate agent in a Lindsay office and is heavily involved in sports.

Coming from a large family doesn't hurt, either. Those who don't know O'Reilly personally, often know his family.

This was evident when the candidate visited Victoria Manor later in the Strong leadership

Of the five local candidates soliciting our votes in the September provincial election, only one stands out as a fighter who will effectively convey our concerns to Queen's Park.

Dennis Drainville has waged a tireless campaign since the shot was fired to begin this race. The NDP candidate has fought tooth and nail to become a credible contender in this election in spite of the popularity of his party in this riding. He has a firm grasp of the issues both at the local and provincial levels and has proven his ability to convey his thoughts in a clear and forceful manner.

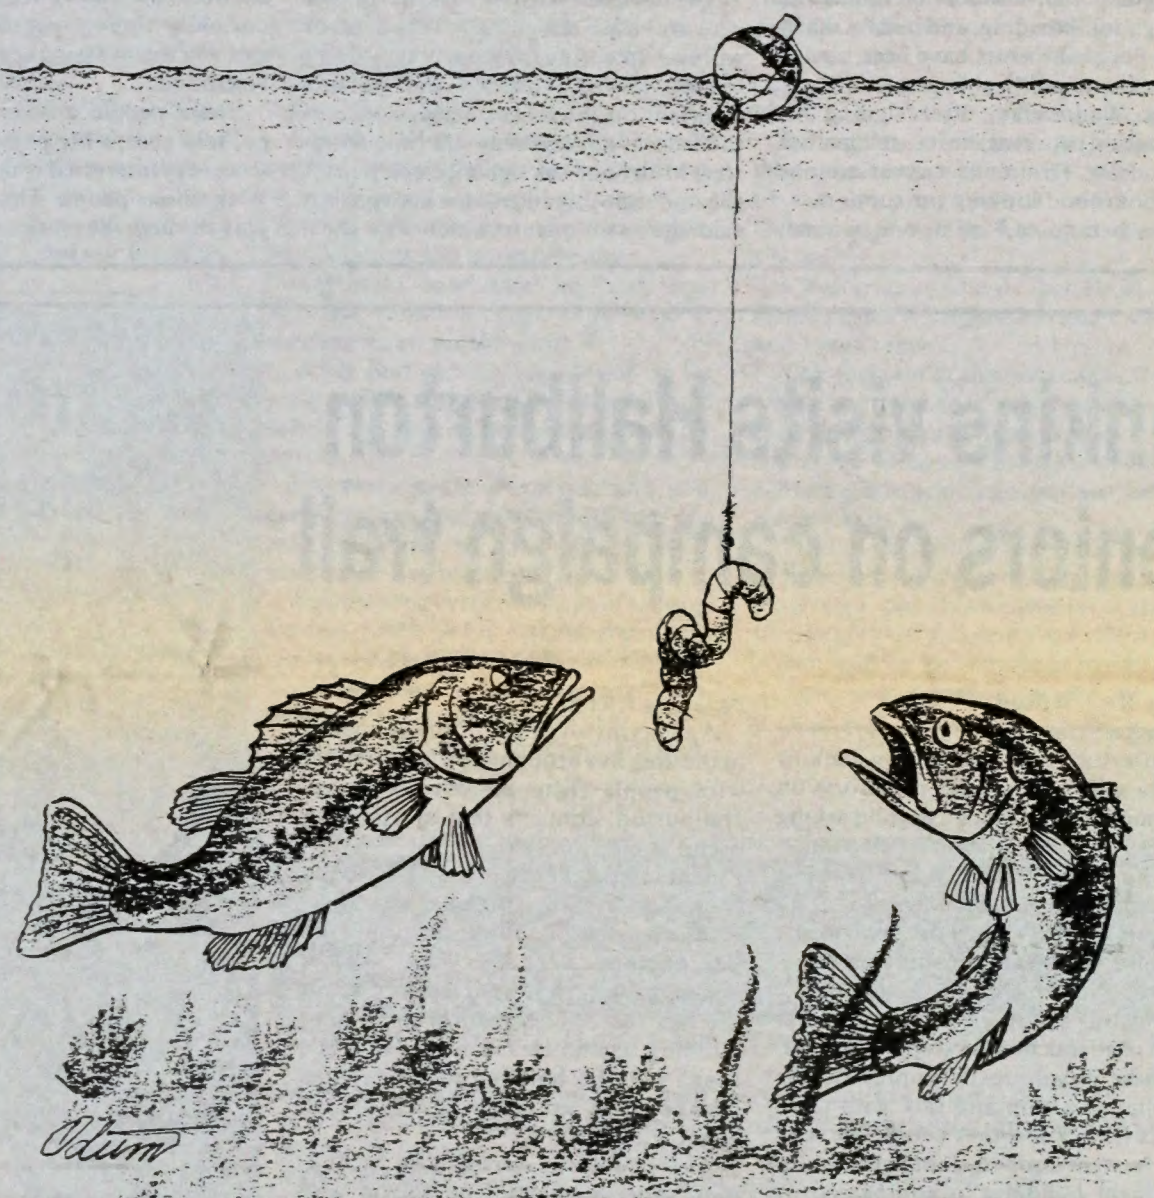

If Drainville loses this election, it is only because of his party affiliation. People of this riding understandably have difficulty accepting the socialistic doctrines of the New Democratic Party.

We share these reservations. However, we feel strongly that this riding — and Haliburton County in particular — needs a strong voice at Queen's Park.

We've had a forceful representative in the past with John Eakins, and yet we still sense our concerns and needs have been overlooked by the government. Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly and Conservative candidate Ron Jenkins are fine gentlemen, but neither comes close to filling Eakins' shoes.

Haliburton County has some important struggles ahead. We desperately need expanded school facilities. Our health care system is in need of repair. We need to preserve the jobs we have while seeking new avenues for economic development. In order to succeed in these struggles, we need someone at Queen's Park who understands us and can effectively relay our message.

Haliburton County residents will have the opportunity to meet all five candidates tonight (Monday) at 7:30 p.m. at the Dysart Community Centre. We urge everyone to come out to this important function and decide for yourself who is best qualified to represent us.

"SUIT YOURSELF - PERSONALLY I NEVER TOUCH WORMS UNTIL AFTER LABOUR DAY."

Canada contains strong, silent heroes...

One of the things I like best about my country is the way we handle heroes. Unlike those of other nations, Canadian heroes are usually quiet. America produces egomaniacal motormouths like tennis tantrum thrower John McEnroe and preening sprinter Carl Lewis. Canada serves up Wayne Gretzky and Rick Hanson. World Cup soccer crybabies stub their toes, then writhe on the field like they've been disembowelled with a putty knife. Canadian hockey players often get their gashes stitched right on the bench so that they won't miss a shift.

Black 'n White

by Arthur Black

Sometimes we underplay our Canadian heroes so thoroughly they almost disappear. Samuel de Champlain, Simon Fraser, Alexander Mackenzie and the other Europeans who first crossed this land were giants among world explorers. Radisson and Groseilliers had enough adventures to fuel a dozen Spielberg movies.

None of them even rates his own bubble gum cards.

Now, if they'd been American! Heck, look what they did with a psychopathic killer like Billy the Kid! Americans even turned a back-stabbing thug like Jim Bowie into a TV series!

If we'd put Champlain in the hands of a good Yankee PR agent he'd have his own chain of take out restaurants by now.

Postal cutbacks targetting crucial times

Editor:

Canada Post is about to strike again.

Remember all those newspaper ads promising "better service for rural Canadians"? Well, "better service" Canada Post style, apparently, means something far different than we as postmasters are accustomed to providing.

Starting in September, hours at many post offices in small Ontario communities will be cut back for the sake of 'standardization'. In truth, this means some offices will be ordered to open at 8 a.m. and will lock their doors at 5 p.m. All offices won't be permitted to start business on Saturday until 9 a.m. and close at noon. In a few cases, standardization means adding 15 or 30 minutes to a post office's hours of operation, but for the most part, we're being cut back at crucial times when many customers now do their postal business.

As postmasters and assistants, we are strongly opposed to these cutbacks in hours, just as we opposed the noon-hour closure which Canada Post imposed on many mid-sized and smaller rural post offices in southwestern Ontario the past year and in northern and eastern Ontario now. We have served rural Canada to the best of our ability for the past 90 years as members of the Canadian Postmasters and Assistants Association. We certainly don't like being undermined by a postal corporation bent on privatization at any cost, particularly when it inconveniences our customers.

We ask readers of this newspaper to consult your postmaster for the reduction in hours planned for your post office. Please call your Member of Parliament to register your opposition to this move by Canada Post. Tell your reeve or local town councillor you think 'better service' means longer, not shorter hours. Above all, let Canada Post know how you feel about its 'better service' for rural Canadians. Write to Mr. Don Lander, President, Canada Post Corporation, Sir Alexander Campbell Building, Ottawa, Ontario K1A 0C1.

...but none as strong as the Miracle Lady

But that's not the way we do it in The Great White North. We're a quiet folk. We prefer our heroes in subdued light, not limelight.

It's the Canadian way — no fuss, no bother. Sometimes I get ticked off that Canadians are so camera-shy. Other times, I think it's the best thing about us. That's when I think that we Canadians are the only people who know what real heroes are.

Because we're surrounded with them.

A nation of quiet heroes.

I knew, for instance, a woman born in rural Ontario back when airplanes were nothing but a rumour and folks still spoke the word diphtheria in a hushed whisper. She was born poor and grew up poorer. Her father died when she was a babe, long before the days of welfare and government assistance. As a tot, she tagged along after her mother, who worked at whatever odd jobs she could find.

University was not an option. Nor was a grand tour of Europe.

This woman married young, raised four children, buried one. She hunkered down through two World Wars, the Great Depression and everything else the Twentieth Century saw fit to fling at her. She stood by her man, through good, less good and the downright grim. When his heart went bad she tended him, buried him when the time came, then slogged on for another 30 years on her own.

She lived a life that modern kids — Canadian kids, anyway — can barely conceive. Nobody bats an eye at the two or three-car household today. This woman took buses and streetcars until she was past childbearing age. Or she walked. (For younger readers, walking is a form of locomotion wherein you lean forward and place one foot in front of the other until you arrive at your destination.)

Television? Most homes I know these days have two or three TV sets. This woman didn't have one in her home until she was 46 years old.

Not that she complained or whined or wrote to the Human Rights Commission, this woman. She didn't consider herself hard done by. She just went ahead and did what needed doing. Cooked and washed and cleaned and fed and clothed and ironed and kissed and spanked and planted and harvested and laughed and grieved.

She raised four kids, none of whom turned out to be axe murderers, child molesters, TV evangelists or politicians. What they mostly were was fertile. Thirteen grandchildren. Fourteen great grandchildren. And counting.

But the Referee in Chief whistles us all down in time. In the end, even her big heart gave out. She died last week at the age of 80 — but not without a battle. She hung in a year longer than doctors gave her. She bounced back so many times that the nurses in Intensive Care called her the Miracle Lady. She was my quiet hero.

She was also my mother.

Three new candidates enter the race

Family Coalition supports values and principles

The local Family Coalition Party candidate says his decision to run in the provincial election is based on the need in Ontario for a party that represents family values.

"I believe that the other parties have discarded the essential values and ideals of the majority of the people living in Ontario," says Brad Medd in a press release. "It is time for a party that will not sacrifice principles for political expediency."

Medd says his party was late entering the race because it was unclear whether former Family Coalition Party candidate was going to run again or not.

Dianne Roblin Lee ran for the party in 1987 but recently moved away to pursue a business venture.

Medd, a Fenelon resident who lives near Cameron, is running on a variety of issues ranging from agriculture to the rights of the family.

He says government farm programs should benefit the family farm and encourage the family way of life in agriculture. Prime food-land must be protected through provincial planning from indiscriminate exploitation, he said.

On the issue of government finances, Medd says the government should operate within a balanced budget and eventually eliminate the deficit over a period of eight years. Also, government programs need to be evaluated and rejustified to determine if they deserve a continuation of funding.

"Those elected representatives are accountable to the electors who vote them into office on the understanding that the representative is in office to represent the people, their wishes and their concerns," he says.

The Family Coalition Party believes in the right to ownership, responsible private enterprise, a free monetary system, free market and technological progress.

"Small business is the backbone of a free enterprise system and the chief provider of employment in Ontario, and its continued well-being should be a prime concern of the government," says Medd.

Medd says he plans to run his campaign on a meager budget and will be actively canvassing for support. He says he will be taking part in the various debates being held in the riding over the coming weeks.

Libertarians want less government interference

Less government interference, lower taxes and the protection of individual rights. That's the basic premise of the Ontario Libertarian party seeking votes in the upcoming provincial election.

Libertarian candidate Ron Hawkrigg added his name to the list of candidates in this provincial election last week. He says his party's ideas are based on common sense.

"The idea is to help the people who need help, not to help everybody," he said. Libertarians blame the current socioeconomic problems on too much government interference.

(more on page 12)

Time for a change, says Independent

Because people are growing weary of the main political parties, Fenelon Falls resident Hugh Boyd has decided to run in this election as an independent candidate.

The latest candidate to add his name to the ballot in Victoria Haliburton says he finds people are either apathetic or disgusted with the three main parties.

Boyd says people are fed up with scandals and corruption in government. He says there was no need to call this election and people are showing a lack of interest. "That's why I'm running."

"If you know who you're going to vote for, that's great," says Boyd, "but if you're undecided, vote for me."

Candidates in debate oppose Liberal policies and practices audience dealt with the issue of county restructuring. A Victoria County steering committee has recommended that most municipalities in the county should be amalgamated to reduce the number of townships to 10 from the current 18.

There has been widespread public opposition to the committee's report and the issue will probably be foremost on the minds of many Victoria County voters.

Medd, the Family Coalition Party candidate, said the province is committed to ensuring that change does take place and called the government's attitude, "government by decree."

"It's government from the top down," said Medd. "Let's get government from the bottom up."

He said that a socio-economic report on amalgamation in Victoria County was supposed to have been prepared to explain the cost of amalgamation, but so far there has been no sign of the report.

Offered his alternative to the committee's suggested plan of amalgamation. He said neighbouring townships should work out cooperative agreements to deal with development pressures.

Such agreements, said Medd, would eliminate the need for amalgamation or annexation.

Drainville said the provincial government is pushing regional government in order to prepare counties to receive more downloaded services. He said the trend toward amalgamation was part of the province's plan to give more responsibilities to the municipalities without substantial financial backing.

He said he is also skeptical of the fact that the issue has gone ahead without any sort of broad consultation.

Libertarian Hawkrigg said the move toward amalgamation is "an infringement on your liberty." While there are currently three levels of government in Canada, Hawkrigg accused the province of trying to add a fourth level.

"It should be up to you, not up to some bureaucrat in Queen's Park," he said. "No government in the land has the right to force you to do anything you don't want to."

Boyd, the independent candidate, said each community in the county has its own special identity. "Everyone needs something to make them unique," he said "I can't believe they want to bring it all together."

Through most of the meeting, the candidates did more agreeing than debating, as they all opposed the policies and practices of the Liberal government.

On the issue of national unity, and Ontario's role in Confederation, all the candidates supported the idea of a strong central government except Hawkrigg who said the provinces should hold more power because they are closer to the people.

The one issue that did produce an exchange between the candidates was the role of government in social services.

Drainville said, for the most part, people who use food banks are victims of the economic system and genuinely need support, although he admitted there are a few that abuse the system.

"The reality is, governments have the responsibility to ensure that the needs of people are met, that they have food to eat, clothes to wear and a roof over their head," he said.

But Medd disagreed. He said the kind of support Drainville talks about "would cost mega-bucks which the government doesn't have." He said money for social programs should be raised by setting up "profit centres" in institutions like hospitals and schools to earn money.

Medd said commercial plazas could be built in conjunction with hospitals so people can spend money during their hospital stay. The profits generated from these enterprises can be turned back into social services, suggested Medd.

Libertarian candidate Hawkrigg said that poor people don't want hand outs, they want a helping hand. He said by reducing taxes, the economy will grow and food banks will not be necessary.

"In a healthy economy, we'll all have jobs," he said.

Responding to Medd's claim that there is not enough money to pay for social services, Drainville said only 17 per cent of Ontario's tax revenue is generated by corporate taxes. "The corporations are getting off scott-free," said Drainville. "We are giving more to corporations than we are giving to the needy."

But Medd took issue with Drainville's plan to tax corporations. Referring to a statement that Drainville made in last week's Times where he supported the idea of start-up funds for businesses, Medd said Drainville "wants to throw money at them and then tax them."

By taxing corporations, Medd said the profit incentive is taken away.

Hawkrigg offered his party's suggested tax policy. He said the Libertarians would like to see a 20 per cent income tax right across the board that would include corporations, with the only exemptions being for the poor.

The debate, which was sponsored by the Bobcaygeon Chamber of Commerce and the Bobcaygeon Independent, was attended by about 40 people.

Committee considering recommendations

by Jay Kerr-Wilson

With the collection of data almost complete, members of Haliburton County's steering committee on long-term health, social service and housing needs are ready to start considering the recommendations they will present.

After last Tuesday's meeting, held in Wilberforce, members of the committee met with The Times to discuss the progress of the study and their feelings about the process.

"It was a learning experience," said vice-chairman Carole Craigmyle.

Minden resident Doug Campbell said he knew very little about the issues when he joined the committee and the educational process was vital.

"It was information I had to have before I could make proper decisions," said Campbell. "Given the importance of the study and that the output will affect the county for the next five, 10 or 15 years, we'd better jolly well be right."

Campbell said he can't understand people who criticize the committee for taking so long. He said the time taken by the committee represents an investment affecting the health care of the county.

The committee was formed to study Haliburton County's long-term needs after Health Minister Elinor Caplan put the proposed 18-bed chronic care unit on hold.

When asked if having the highly controversial chronic care issue hanging over their heads inhibited the committee's work, Marlene Edwards replied that the issue actually acted as a catalyst.

"The 18-bed issue was a pretty sharp sword," said Edwards. "It's really what has driven the committee to some extent."

The drama of the issue put Haliburton County to the forefront of long-term reform in the province, committee members said.

Marshall Elliott, Executive Director of the District Health Council, serves as a resource person to the committee and he said the Ministry's decision to put the chronic care unit on hold was not made lightly.

"It was not easy to say no to the 18 beds," said Elliott. "I'm convinced it was a hard thing to do, but also the intelligent thing to do."

Elliott said that although the proposed chronic care unit was recommended by a District Health Council study carried out in 1984, "a lot of things change in six years."

Elliott said the unit would have accommodated 18 people, "and that's all." Building the chronic care unit would have been a "limited solution," he said.

But committee member Jack Brezina pointed out that adding a chronic care unit to some county facility has not yet been ruled out by the committee.

Brezina was one of the committee members representing the interests of health care consumers. He said the interests of the general public were well represented at the committee table by the various members.

Campbell said too much emphasis has been placed on the 18-bed unit. Although he admitted that the chronic care bed issue was "a canker" with some of the committee members, he said in general most of the committee was willing to "back up and look at all the information that's available."

Craigmyle said the committee has done an in-depth study and taken it a step further by trying to educate the public. "Because we've done that, we feel good that we've done our job," she said. "By going to the people to get their input, we hope they understand why we make the recommendations we make."

Everybody on the committee believes the government intends to follow through on the recommendations of the committee, said Brezina. "We wouldn't have spent the time if we didn't think we'd come out with something."

Brezina said the committee wanted to do a professional job on the study and wouldn't just tack the 18-bed unit onto the list of recommendations to placate the public.

Edwards said the issue wasn't "18 beds or whatelse" but rather to try and determine what the residents of Haliburton County need. "There are 140 institutional beds in the county," said Edwards. "To say we need 18 more doesn't seem to be the full equation."

It's not a question of whether the county does or doesn't need beds, she said. The county needs both beds and community care and the committee has to find the best balance. "It's not a question of either, or."

Donna Pacey said the study is looking at more than just health needs but is trying to address all the health, social service and housing needs of the county. And because the membership of the committee is mostly local people, Pacey said they will be affected by the study.

"We, as residents of Haliburton County, will be recipients of the services, so we also have those interests at heart," she said.

Campbell agreed that the study will be a product of local efforts and concerns. "I feel a real sense of ownership in the committee's operation," he said.

When the study began, Craigmyle said she had no idea how much there was to learn about long-term care. "There's no way a lay person could ever realize the magnitude of the study," she said. "I'm still in awe at the amount of information we had to learn. It's really mind-boggling."

should have been used to give access between the floors.

He asked Bacon about the possibility of moving residents who can't manage the stairs to ground floor apartments.

Bacon said most of the residents on the ground floor are there for a good reason and there would be little sense in switching apartments with someone on the second floor.

He also expressed concern about the fact that the stairs present an obstacle to emergency crews, such as ambulance attendants, who have to get to the second floor.

"I appreciate where you're coming from," said Jenkins. He said more and more people living on the second floor will begin to have trouble negotiating the stairs.

In all senior housing, Jenkins said that either ramps or elevators should be available to residents living above the ground floor.

"There has to be accessibility to the ground floor from the second floor," said Jenkins.

Other residents used the opportunity to vent their frustrations about the Canadian Constitution and the current Liberal provincial government.

"I'm very happy to meet you," said one woman. She said retiring Victoria-Haliburton Liberal MPP John Eakins is a "fine man" but added "we don't need that type of government."

"I'll vote for you, I guess," she said.

Resident Herb Baker noted his appreciation for Jenkins' efforts in getting out and meeting the people. "The only way to get success is to beat the bushes," said Baker. "I know that from being a car salesman."

But for the most part the residents were satisfied just meeting Jenkins, shaking his hand and accepting one of his cards.

The candidates rural background struck a chord with many of the residents who had also been raised on farms.

Jenkins sympathized with the seniors about the hard times that older generations experienced living in rural areas.

"We in our generation will never know the times our parents and grandparents had," he said.

After the tour of the Mountain View building, Jenkins visited the residents at Extencicare, making the rounds of an exercise class, talking to residents in their rooms and meeting people who were waiting for lunch in the dining room.

From there, Jenkins went to the Parklane apartments, meeting with the residents and handing out cards. When his knock went unanswered, Jenkins left one of his cards propped against the door handle, with the message "sorry I missed you" written on the back.

Jenkins received some promised support from one resident who said, "you'd better get in and do something about that Peterson. You have my vote."

After a brief lunch in the village, Dysart councillor and former Conservative candidate Murray Fearrey took Jenkins on a tour of the Haliburton Industrial Park to meet with business owners and employees.

The tour included a stop at the landfill site, where Jenkins talked to the attendant about provincial recycling efforts and the garbage crisis in Ontario.

Jenkins said more effort has to put into identifying potential landfill sites in the province and suggested the government should start looking at Crown land which makes up seven per cent of Ontario.

After making his way along the highway Jenkins rounded out his day on Haliburton's Main Street.

Liberal candidate Pat O'Reilly met a lot of friends while out campaigning Wednesday. William Perry, who once delivered ice to all the Lindsay stores, was pleased to don one of O'Reilly's buttons and pledge his support.

O'Reilly is a confident campaigner morning. Many of the residents of this old age home gladly greeted O'Reilly and his sister, Patricia, as though they were relatives.

"Good morning. How are you this morning?" O'Reilly beams as he enters room after room in the modern new building. "I'm Pat O'Reilly the Liberal Candidate for Victoria Haliburton."

In many cases the introduction is unnecessary. Many know who he is before O'Reilly ever utters a word. He spoke with neighbours, friends of the family, the former custodian of his high school and the man who once delivered ice to all the stores in town. He is almost as well known with this older generation of voters as with the downtown merchants.

Although his style is confident while campaigning on his own, O'Reilly is overshadowed while in the presence of the man he is aiming to replace. In the afternoon, the candidate went on a tour of the Trent Rubber Services mill along with retiring MPP John Eakins. And although Eakins is stepping away from politics, he was still the centre of attention at this affair.

The TRS tour was arranged after a recent $10-million grant was awarded to this plant. The grant will allow the company to upgrade its equipment in order that it produce and market products made from the recycled tire rubber.

O'Reilly, however, wasn't entirely upstaged. While Eakins and reporters toured the mill, O'Reilly took advantage of the opportunity to speak with a few of the employees. Here he was greeted with the same warm welcome he received earlier in the day.

MEN'S SOCCER
Final home game of the season
Thursday, August 30
6:45 p.m.

Key blend of players leads Haliburton to another win

by Carol Moffatt

The Haliburton Men's soccer team beat up on the Muskoka Inter to a 9-1 win Wednesday, with defence-man Kevin Sicard bringing home a hat trick.

Excellent defensive action by Sicard, Al Jopling and Mark Sorenson stymied the few scoring opportunities Muskoka had throughout the game.

Although Haliburton's play was sloppy in the first half Cecil Smith managed to score. Jan Haedicke put in the second Haliburton goal and Muskoka put the ball by goaltender Brian Moore to bring the score up to 2-1 at the end of the first half.

Haliburton dominated the field in the second half. Moore called Muskoka's goalie "shell shocked" as a result of the number of Haliburton shots on goal, which he figured was at least 15, not counting the goal shots.

In the second half, Sicard moved up to play forward for a while, as did Ivor Thompson, Jopling and Sorenson.

Haedicke scored a second time, Thompson put one past the minder. Hans Walter added two goals of his own to the board and Sicard made it by the minder three times.

Tom Eager, Eoin Ross and Joe Mancuso were missing from the lineup, as was defenceman Dave Bush but despite the absences the team played a strong, hard game.

A Muskoka player commented on the fine blend of both youth and experience of Haliburton's lineup which Moore called "the key to the team right now."

Haliburton's next home game takes place Thursday August 30 at 6:45 p.m. at the Archie Stouffer school field.

Arena committee still sought

Minden council is still looking for people to serve on two committees that will be formed to oversee the proposed expansion of the community centre and arena.

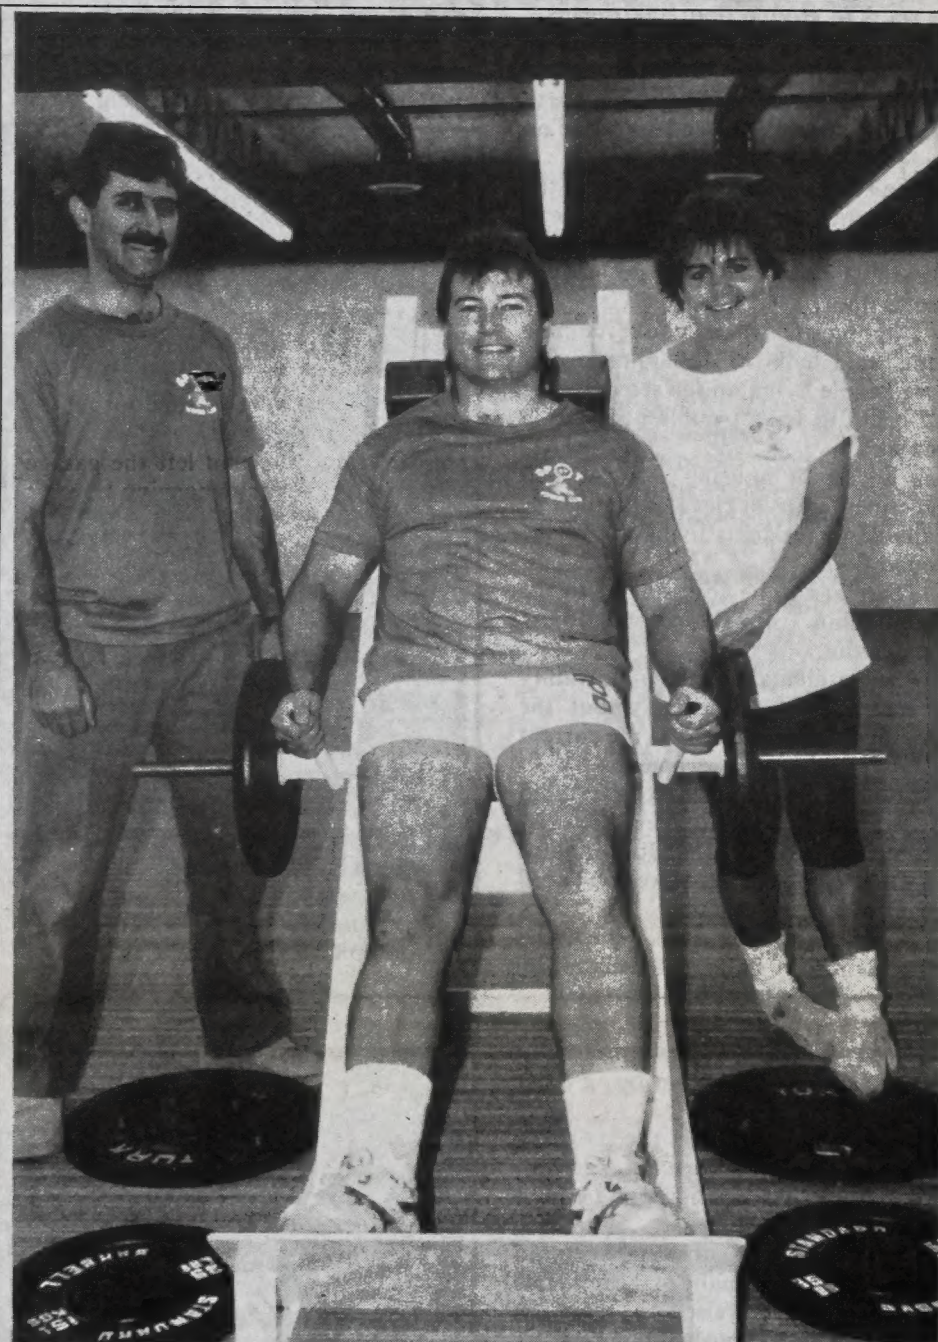

The township hosted a public meeting last Wednesday to present the proposal to residents and at that time several names were brought forward of people to serve on the building committee and on the fund-raising committee.

But at last Thursday's council meeting, Deputy-Reeve Bern Berry said the township will still like to hear from people interested on serving on the committees.

Berry said there may be people who missed the meeting but would like to serve on either of the two committees. He said he would especially like to someone from Minden's business community come forward.

Spot 97 Fitness Club has opened its doors in Minden's Heritage Plaza. The club is owned and operated by Dave Dollo (left) and Brian Shaw (centre). Shaw's wife Cathy (right), is a certified aerobics instructor and will be leading classes that range from "noon hour quickies" to "fat blasters". Shaw has been a fitness instructor in the past and will oversee the weight training area. The club is equipped with complete shower and changeroom facilities and memberships are available now.

Two more fires erupt after firemen leave gone (any further) if I hadn't seen his arm."

Orlowski said Milewski was conscious, slightly confused and crying. He said Milewski told him his children were in Toronto and that he had been cooking hamburgers in the kitchen. "I could hear him crying from our window," said Rochelle. The Orlowski home is one house away from Milewski's.

An ambulance took Milewski to Minden Hospital where he was treated for smoke inhalation and released.

Sixteen firemen, two pumper units and the tanker were dispatched from Minden. Fire Chief Don Booth said the fire was extinguished in a few hours but there was concern about secondary fire in the walls.

"We could feel the heat but we couldn't find any more fire," said Booth. Orlowski said he would keep an eye on the house, and by about 10:45 p.m., the kitchen was on fire again.

"I went to put (Milewski's) keys in his truck in case he came back and I saw more fire," said Orlowski. He woke up neighbour Roman Wereszczakowski and, armed with garden hoses, the two put the small fire out.

"The fire was inside the wall so I took a chair and tore the wall off and we put it out," said Orlowski. But that wasn't the last of the fire. "Around 3 a.m. Roman was pounding on our door yelling 'Fire'," said Rochelle.

The initial fire had left the garage intact but by the early morning hours it was ablaze. Wereszczakowski's dogs woke him up and he rushed to soak down his own home—which sits close to Milewski's garage—in case the fire spread.

"I thought the firemen were here with spotlights, that's how bright it was," said Wereszczakowski. He called the fire department and woke up Orlowski. Again they stretched their garden hoses to Milewski's, this time to protect their properties. "We were just wetting the grass and the burning charred bits that flew off the building," said Orlowski.

Wereszczakowski said he heard small explosions inside the burning garage, and both he and Orlowski watched shards of Charred ruins are all that remain of Richard Milewski's living room. The fire destroyed much of the upstairs when the roof collapsed in most of the rooms. The fire began in the kitchen and spread quickly. The tertiary fire destroyed the garage which had previously escaped the blaze.

glass fall to the ground from the broken windows.

The fire department battled the blaze with a foam wetting agent which soaks deeply into debris and is more likely to prevent secondary fires than water alone. Booth said he wasn't surprised that the fire started up again. "It's so hard to judge with a house fire. It gets inside the walls," he said.

Milewski went to Toronto and could not be reached for comment. It is currently unknown if there will be an official investigation by the Fire Marshall's Office, but the cause of the fire is under investigation by the OPP.

A helping hand not a handout

Hawkrigg says government involvement in issues such as health care, education, housing and social assistance has resulted in a "complete mess." Citing health care as an example, Hawkrigg said "there's enough money (to go around), it's just mismanaged. Get the government out of the hospitals and let the health care professionals run them. A bureaucrat knows nothing about health care and how to run a hospital," he said.

Hawkrigg says private health coverage is something everyone should have access to. "If someone like Conrad Black wants to have private health care, why don't we let him?" he asked. However, he said, the government should pick up the tab for those people who can't and never will afford private coverage.

The Libertarian party "disagrees totally" with the federal goods and services tax, said Hawkrigg. "We realize there's a problem with the tax system but this is just another tax grab. We believe in a 20 per cent across the board tax and that includes corporations," he said.

"They all say they're going to do something about taxes but how many times have we heard that?" he asked, referring to other party candidates in Wednesday's debate. "Where is all this money we pay (in taxes)?" he asked.

Hawkrigg said education issues should be dealt with by teachers and principals, auto insurance should return to private industry and rent controls should be abolished.

"People can't afford houses so the government says it will build more government housing. Now they're house builders. What good is that?" said Hawkrigg.

The days of people starting out with little, working hard and saving for a house are gone, says Hawkrigg. "People are given money and given houses," he said, which often creates a cycle of people who want more than they are prepared to work for.

That, says Hawkrigg, helps create a trend of social assistance and welfare dependency, neither of which the Libertarians feel is necessary. "We've just gone through a mini-economic boom and yet we have food banks," he said. "It's not that no one cares. We want these people looked after, not out in the street," he said.

"Let's create jobs. Let's lend a helping hand, not a handout. Most people I know would rather have a job than welfare," he said. "And if you don't own your home, you're not responsible for it and you don't take care of it," he added.

Hawkrigg said the government has a certain responsibility for the country's protection from things like invasion and criminals. "Other than that, who are they to tell us what to read and watch and how to live?" he asked. (The Libertarians are also against censorship of any kind. "That's a dangerous game. Where does it end?" said Hawkrigg.)

The Libertarian party feels polluters should be dealt with harshly and that pay equity is a natural evolution of our society. "As much as I like tarts, I think a nurse should be ranked higher than a pastry chef," he said.

"We believe in a free market system," said Hawkrigg. "If it ain't broke, don't fix it. We wouldn't change something to suit our ideology," he said of the Libertarian party.

"Individual liberty is first and foremost in our party. We have no party policy, but rather a basic philosophy," he said. The Libertarians would phase in their proposed changes. "Our policies would be cruel if implemented immediately. It would be a gradual transition," said Hawkrigg.

More than a fair job

Editor:

May we say thanks and congratulations to all who gave of their time and talents to the 1990 Haliburton County Fair. Competition was keen and the judges did not have an easy time awarding the ribbons to the exhibits.

The Dog Show, Farmers' Olympics, Truck and Tractor Pull, animal exhibits, talent show, bingo on Friday night, Tea Room, fire trucks and the horse, sheep and goat shows all created interest and excitement. Add to this the Line Dancers, Scottish Dancers, the excellent job done by Ross Farr as Master of Ceremonies, ticket sells, all who contributed in many ways and not to be forgotten, those who laboured setting up and dismantling the grounds and the weather man and you have the ingredients for a great weekend.

The 1990 Fair was a great success due to the support, involvement and enthusiasm of many volunteers from our community. Again, a sincere "thanks" to all participants who made 1990 another great year in the 126 year history of the Haliburton County Fair.

Joan Moore,
Secretary,
Minden Agricultural Society.

No more compromises

Editor:

A first quality health care system is the right of every Canadian. The Ontario government has seen fit to severely compromise the quality of health care available to Ontario residents.

Inadequate funding has removed the care from the health care system. Overcrowding, bed closures and operating room closures are the result of insufficient funding. Emergency transfers are delayed at added risk to the patient due to lack of beds and/or staff. Long-distance health care is becoming common practice. Patients are required to travel across the province and in some cases, outside of the country for surgical or therapeutic treatment. Waiting lists grow and patients are rescheduled for so-called elective surgery. Despite the fact that patients waiting for surgery have died, operating rooms remain closed.

Affordable health care is becoming a thing of the past. The added cost of long-distance transportation and accommodation for patients is being laid upon an already financially and emotionally burdened family. Visits to the acutely ill and chronic patients are being reduced solely on the basis of affordability. User fees are now in place at the hospital. Emergency patients are required to purchase cast boots, splints, neck collars etc. The cost for these items is varied, however, the fact that it is now an out-of-pocket expense for the patient is constant.

Active care beds are occupied by chronic care patients. The promised increased chronic care beds are non-existent. Some long-time community residents are forced to live away from their families and friends because enough beds are not available locally.

Hospital employees in every department are feeling "burned-out" and frustrated by the increased workload. Less time is available for "hands on caring" and "listening". This time is essential to the emotional and physical healing of the patient. Hospital staffing has not increased in proportion to the upgraded care and services required by patients and/or increasing patient numbers. We want the personal touch to return to health care.

During this election campaign it is imperative that all three political parties are made to understand and accept the fact that first quality health care is of primary importance to the people of Ontario. Our concerns must be dealt with. Let's put the care back into the health care system.

Drainville concerned about honesty and integrity ville has been on the streets trying to meet as many people as possible. He usually starts his day at the gates of one of the area plants, introducing himself to the employees as they arrive for work.

The rest of the morning is then spent going door-to-door in different communities.

Now that the candidates have started to appear at the debates around the riding, Drainville has altered his schedule accordingly.

Although he still spends his mornings canvassing, he tries to quit at about 3 p.m. so he will be well rested for the night's debate. "If I'm not well rested, my ability to respond quickly is diminished," he said.

When going around a neighbourhood, Drainville introduces himself and hands out a pamphlet. He tells people he's running because of his concern about the lack of honesty and integrity in the current government in the hope of getting a response.

"There's a whole psychology to canvassing," he said. "You have to look people in the eye and engage them, find out how they feel about the issues."

But in asking for people's opinions, Drainville has to be prepared to defend himself and his party.

"My husband is a Liberal and he thinks a socialist government is going to give the steel workers $40 an hour," says one woman.

Drainville replies that only 18 per cent of Ontario's work force is unionized and also responds to the accusation that an NDP government would force business to flee the province.

"Other province's have had NDP governments and there's been no wholesale departure of business," he said. "Ontario is the heartland of the country. Businesses are not going to cut their own throats economically."

Although he still runs across the odd person who is against any socialist ideology, Drainville says most people he meets don't share that fear.

NDP candidate Dennis Drainville filed his nomination papers Wednesday morning at the start of a busy day.

"I've only met one person who went off the board with an attack on socialism," he said. "He called me a Nazi and a Communist. I just asked him if there was anything else he wanted to call me before I left."

"There's a lot of education to be done. A lot of people don't know what socialism is."

Drainville also has to be prepared to defend the leader of the NDP, Bob Rae.

"Mr. Rae is a great one to criticize, but he doesn't put out much about what he'll do himself," said one woman. Drainville responded by explaining that the NDP don't want to run a campaign by offering "a promise a day" and pointed out the millions of dollars in programs that the Liberals have unveiled in the past three weeks.

And occasionally a candidate will run into a voter who's mind is made up and who doesn't want to listen to any explanation of a candidate's platform.

"I don't care much for politics," said one woman who refused to accept one of Drainville's pamphlets. "I think Peterson is doing a good job."

"That's the first time I've heard that," said Drainville as he walked away from the house.

Of all the various campaign-related activities he's involved in, Drainville says door-to-door canvassing is the most satisfying.

"You get to hear people's concerns," he said. "Glad handing in a shopping mall and handing out pamphlets you get to meet a lot of people, but it's a mug's game.

"When you go to their doors, you can see how people themselves are approaching the issues. You find out what's important to them and what concerns them."

And in some cases Drainville's persistence in getting out and meeting the people has paid dividends.

"You're the only candidate I've seen personally at the door," one woman remarked after Drainville introduced himself.

One Kinmount resident pledged her support for Drainville because of his commitment to visit every corner of the riding.

Drainville says he won't avoid going to houses that have his competitor's campaign signs on the front lawn.

"You have to allow people the opportunity to make up their mind if it's you they want to support," he said. "Some people may support the first candidate they meet and agree to put a sign on their lawn, but the next candidate may come along and may have more things to say."

But if someone is obviously a committed Liberal or Conservative supporter, Drainville says he doesn't spend much time trying to sway them. "I introduce myself, give them a pamphlet and move on," he said.

Because the candidates have to cover a large area and only have a limited amount of time to spend at each house, Drainville says he has to invest his time with people whose votes he can win.

Although this campaign has proved to be as gruelling and demanding as any, Drainville has lost 20 lbs. along the trail, he says he and his supporters have been "buoyed up by the response" of the voters.

"We are so well-coordinated and organized and the mood is so up-beat, it's a joy to run this campaign," he said. "If a campaign is no fun, and there's no laughter in the campaign office, you know something is wrong."

Special needs centre opens new facility

A new shower and washroom facility was officially opened at the Peterson Woods Outdoor Centre on August 8.

The new facility will serve the many special groups which attend the centre, including those from community counselling groups, Children's Aid Societies, Children's Mental Health Agencies, Young Offenders' Homes and Adult Mental Health Groups.

The centre is funded by the Ministry of Community and Social Services through the Outdoor Programs component of Kinark Child and Family Services. Residential camping and the therapeutic use of the outdoors have been an integral part of Kinark for 30 years.

The centre currently provides over 200 program days which amounts to approximately 1,500 participant days throughout a year. The programs provided at the Centre strive to deliver a range of experiences that encourage personal growth, treatment progress, positive social interaction and skill development.

The Peterson Woods Outdoor Centre is on a 600 acre semi-wilderness site on Queen's Line, off of Highway 118. A small lake with a sand beach, a large sports field, nature/ski trails, 10 sleeping cabins, program buildings and a wide range of wildlife habitats exist on the property.

Activities campers become involved with include swimming, canoeing, riding, arts and crafts, animal ecology, drama, cooperative games and a wide range of sports.

Home Support appreciated

Editor:

I wonder if our readers know what a great help we have in the Home Support Services.

Recently I needed to go to Lindsay for medical attention and was lucky enough to have Linda McKnight to drive me. She was so kind and made the trip as comfortable as possible. I also enjoyed my talk to her husband Lyle. We Seniors have a great deal to be thankful for.

Not all owners represented

Editor:

The August 13 Times article on the partial closing of the Twelve Mile Lake Road implied that all cottage owners were represented in the delegation.

We are one of the four land owners having access off Hwy. 35 and were not part of this delegation. We are hopeful that road will remain open for everyone to enjoy.

Is Canadian bilingualism really 'billionguali$m'?

Editor:

Ninety-seven percent of Canadians that I've heard from want a national referendum held on Forced Official Bilingualism in Canada. I posed my question in a one-page letter-to-the-editor mailed to over 100 newspapers and many radio and TV stations across Canada. I have received telephone calls from Newfoundland to British Columbia and hundreds of enriching heart-warming letters from concerned Canadians.

Almost all want to have the opportunity of a referendum where taxpayers can decide whether we can afford to spend billions of our dollars propping up Canada's bilingual myth... "billionguali$m".

Apparently the indefensible federal bilingual Bill C-72 (The Official Language Act of 1988) based on the myth has proven to be too expensive, discriminatory and very divisive. Even the Chief of Language Police has threatened to resign.

Excluding our one province of Quebec, 98 percent of our daily newspapers, 94 percent of radio and 87 percent of TV are in English. That's Canada's reality.

What comes through in the letters received is the great love for our country and the overwhelming disappointment in our politicians' intolerance toward democracy. Our elected representatives are not listening to the people. Sadly, it appears that our politicians have decided that they are not accountable to the electorate and mistakenly believe that taxation without representation is Canadian democracy.

Many letters candidly question whether Canada is a democracy "by the people."

SPORTING THE RIBBONS

Trio at gallery offer lovely look at the Highlands

by Carol Moffatt

It's a step into the Highlands, a glimpse of the beauty which surrounds us. It's a blending of ideas, feelings and mediums with lifetimes of experience.

Ron Murdoch, Dick Griffin and Fred Seedhouse are the artists showing at the Agnes Jamieson Gallery until September 1. While they each use different mediums and display distinct styles, they all continue to create images simply for the love of art.

Murdoch, an avid outdoorsman, paints nature, wildlife and outdoor scenes. He uses both acrylics and oils which he chooses depending upon the subject and the image he wants to create.

Born in Scotland, Murdoch took evening courses at the Glasgow School of Art and brought his interest in visual arts to Canada in 1954 when he emigrated. He moved to Haliburton in 1970, retired in 1986 and now spends much of his time refining his craft. "I love it," he said of painting.

Murdoch is largely a self-taught painter. "I took some courses, but nothing too wonderful," he said. "And I always liked to (paint) even when the pictures weren't that great," he added.

The Murdoch painting which demands the most attention is a chillingly peaceful winter scene entitled "Out of the Storm". "I see my father-in-law in that

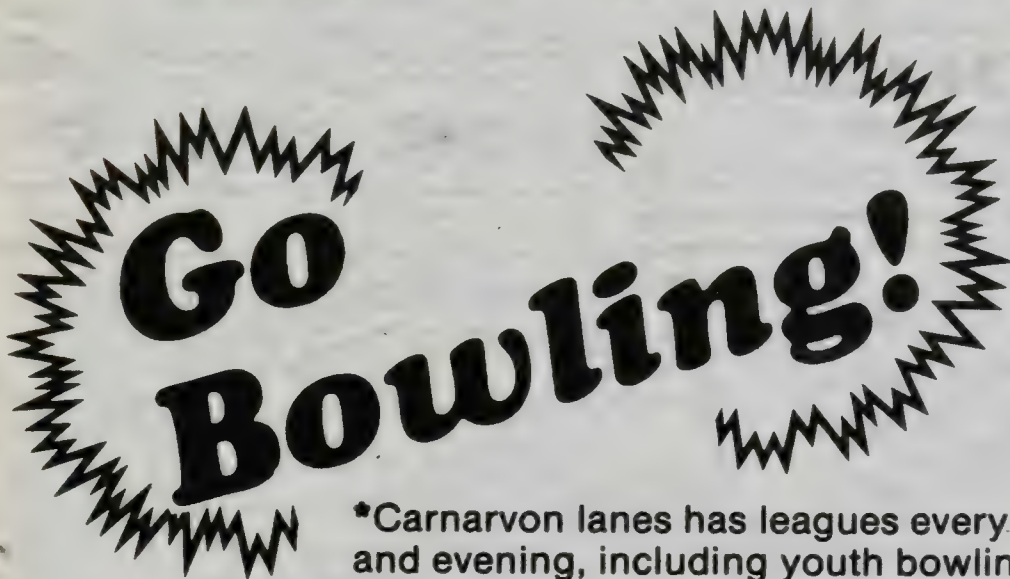

(more on page 19)

A talented trio!

Fred Seedhouse, Ron Murdoch and Dick Griffin are three talented local artists whose show at the Agnes Jamieson Gallery is worth a look. All three spent time in Haliburton while growing up and the Highlands now provide all three with much of their inspiration. Seedhouse is a watercolor landscape artist, Murdoch works in oils and acrylics to produce his nature and wildlife paintings and Griffin creates a variety of images in pastels.

Wondering what to do this winter?

painting," said Murdoch, "that's why I painted it. It reminds me of him."

Despite the public's obvious interest in the image, it is not for sale. "Anyone who wants it better ask the owner—my wife," Murdoch said with a laugh.

Dick Griffin grew up in Muskoka cottage country. "My dad was a pastel painter. He used to sit and draw the clouds he saw, make notes about the details and then go and paint from the notes the next day. That's what I grew up with," he said.

Griffin has worked in many mediums such as oils, acrylics and pen and ink but pastels—a demanding but satisfying medium—has a hold on his heart. "I don't have the patience for oils. Pastels are pure colors," he said.

Art has always been a part of Griffin's life. He spent 39 years in the creative end of the advertising industry in Toronto, moving up from a Junior Artist to a Creative Consultant. He now lives outside Norland and devotes his time to painting.

Griffin's images portray weather—such as storm clouds or sunsets—and landscapes, old barns and homes, and animals. He uses different paper textures to vary the feeling of his images and in one particular painting, has used the color of the paper as part of the image.

Different again is the work of Fred Seedhouse. Primarily a landscape painter, Seedhouse uses watercolours to bring his haunting images to life. His images are somewhat impressionistic—lone scraggly pines resolutely bearing the brunt of life were interpreted by one viewer as "a burnt forest after a fire".

Seedhouse painted regularly with oils in the 1950s and suddenly stopped. "I did nothing until 1982 when my wife suggested watercolours," he said. "I was tempted to go back to oils. It's difficult but rewarding," he said of watercolor painting.

Seedhouse grew up at a cottage on Head Lake and is now a permanent resident in Haliburton. He has taught, won several awards and shown work in several shows, as have both Murdoch and Griffin.

Wall-to-wall people at successful Pub Night

For Your Service

by Georgina Deeks

Another successful Pub Nite. How successful? Wall to wall people - an excellent night. Fish and chips cooked and served by our Legion ladies. Entertainment provided by members from Bracebridge Branch 161. Vivian Ross on the organ and Ed and Mae Britton singing. Our own Reg Munns on guitar and his "little girl" Harry McCleery performed a duet. Great job folks, many thanks to all. Roy McDonald won his dolly the same night and just wouldn't let her out of his sight. Congratulations Roy.

Remember, as of September 1, membership dues are payable. Please help us attain 100 percent Early Bird. Snowbirds, please pay dues before you leave. Thank you.

Many thanks to all volunteers who worked during the recent fair. Our marching members were supported by Haliburton Branch 129 band, colour party and members. Thanks 129.

Honours and Awards dinner and presentations will be held in the Legion hall on Saturday, November 10 at 6:30 p.m. Dinner $7.50 per person.

All members are welcome.

Don't forget general meeting, September 5 at 7:30 p.m. Attend your meetings this is where you speak up.

A speedy recovery to members on our sick list, Ruth Guertin, Bob Reynolds and Jim Magill.

Attention members and vets. We are asked to participate in these parades on the following dates. Let's have a good turnout. September 1 Kinmount Fair; September 9 Decoration Day Minden, 2 p.m. September 16, church parade in Haliburton; September 23 Drumhead Service in Peterborough. Details will be posted on Branch 636 bulletin board.

LOONS: A little of the mystery unfolded

by Carol Moffatt

Their fossil records go back 20 million years. They're a highly specialized and adapted species and they are adored around the world. Gavia immer. The common loon.

Their calls have been described as chilling and romantic, haunting and peaceful. Despite differing opinions of loons, there is one thing commonly agreed upon: they are mysterious.

They float silently in the water, looking more like decoys than live birds. They vanish from view and suddenly re-appear yards away. They are proud, regal and untouchable.

Surprisingly, loons can live to be as old as 30. They're an unusually large bird, with a wingspan of 1.3 metres and weighing up to 4.5 kilograms. Part of the reason for their weight is their bone structure. Where most birds have hollow bones to make flying easier, loons have solid bones to make diving easier.

They are graceful swimmers and efficient divers but loons are awkward both on land and in the air. The only reason loons even leave the water is to travel from one body of water to another or to incubate their young.

Loons are tremendously territorial during the spring. They will aggress against threatening predators and even against other loons to protect their food supply and their young.

Interestingly, this instinct changes in late summer when young loons have become moderately self sufficient. Then adult loons will 'raft', or spend time in groups, engaging in pre-migration, somewhat ritualistic behavior.

This behavior includes floating in tight circles, peering beneath the water's surface, performing short dives and feeding in synchronization.

Loons winter along the eastern coast of North America, primarily around the Carolinas, Texas and Florida. They divide their time evenly between wintering and summering grounds, spending roughly six months in each.

Although loons summer in fresh water, they winter in salt water. Special glands near their eyes help remove the salt so no damage is done to the eyes.

It has long been said that loons mate for life, but this theory can't be proven. Most loons return to the same nesting area, but whether or not they do so with the same mate is uncertain.

Nesting grounds must meet several criteria. Because they are visual hunters loons require clear water. They must have a steady and abundant supply of fish, a place to make a nest (tall reeds or marshy areas seem to be preferred) and a shallow, calm area to serve as a 'nursery'.

Loons usually lay two eggs. Often only one hatches, though, because a baby loon must be in the water within 24 hours of hatching and adult loons will leave their nest, and a remaining unhatched egg, to ensure the hatched loon gets to the water. An unsupervised egg is usually quickly stolen away by predators.

The common loon is well known for its lonely cry and mocking laugh, but it's a mysterious, untouchable bird. Most people take for granted the regal birds will simply reappear each spring but not many know its habits.

Ornithologists call newborn loons "downy young" because of the fluffy, downy appearance of the bird. At this stage they are often seen riding on the backs of adults which protects them from predators and keeps them warm.

Life is quite risky for a loon this size. Large fish, gulls, large turtles and ospreys have been known to snatch a downy young loon from the water. Three weeks after hatching, the "small young" are one-third of the size of an adult. Feathers are distinguishable and they begin to dive and swim alone.

By six weeks of age, they are two-thirds the size of an adult, are called "large young" and are unlikely to die from predation. They are still fed by their parents but have learned how to hunt and swim quite efficiently. By 12 weeks of age they learn how to fly.

Loons are not an endangered species but their survival could be threatened by progress. Acid rain determines where loons can nest and live. Vegetation killed by acid rain can't support fish and not enough fish will force loons to nest elsewhere the following year.

Increasing development in northern regions also threatens loons. As more and more people develop shorelines, more and more potential nesting and feeding habitats are destroyed. Developers are encouraged to leave natural marshy areas alone or to provide alternate nesting grounds such as "nesting platforms" for loons.

Increased water traffic is also a growing concern. Waves from boats often wash over nests which sit on rocky outcroppings, in reedbeds or simply on the edge of land. Young loons which don't move quickly are often run over by boats.

Aside from human intervention, nature also plays an important role in the balance of the loon population. Crows, ravens, turtles, racoon and sometimes even bears will prey on young loons but his isn't a bad thing, it's simply the cycle of nature.

The calls of the loon are what most people like most about the birds. Although most people may only recognize the familiar "wail call", there are, in fact, four very distinct calls, each with a distinct meaning.

The "wail call" is likened to the howl of a wolf, the long, lonely cry that tends to echo across a lake and is most likely to be returned by another loon. This signifies the desire to interact with or be re-united with another family member.

The "tremolo" is also familiar to most people. It has been compared to laughter. This cry indicates a bird is frightened or disturbed and may mean an aggressor is near. Males and females use this call along with feigned injury to draw predators away from their nest. Combined with the loon's ability to pop up and down in the water, the effect confuses and often scares off predators.

The tremolo is also the only call loons use in flight. In flight it is somewhat distorted, more shrill and faster.

The "yodel" can be likened to the cry of gulls. One long call followed by several short bursts is used only by

Environmental golden egg will always elude humans

Reflections

by David Suzuki

Children learn about the hazards of greed and impatience in the fable about the goose that laid the golden egg. That lesson seems to be forgotten today.

We depend on the planet's biosphere for our lives yet we are now destroying it without even knowing how much is left.

What businessman would consider using up all of the contents of a warehouse without first doing a complete inventory? Yet that is what we are doing with the planetary storehouse. In this century, we have acquired very powerful technologies with which to extract natural resources. But we do so at accelerating rates without any understanding of the biological complexity that produces the abundance.

As environmentalists focus on the struggle to save small fragments of wilderness, it is often difficult to remember the whole planet of which the contentious bits are a part. That's what made the weeklong WILD conference held in Honolulu in June so important.

Sponsored by British Columbia's Western Canada Wilderness Committee, the conference brought people from 26 countries of the world together to begin a monumental task — to map all areas of wilderness left on the planet. In an age of satellite imaging and supercomputers, it is surprising to realize that we don't even know what there is in the way of untouched areas on earth.

Not long ago, this planet was a garden of Eden, clothed in green and supporting an abundance of life beside which today's most lush areas would seem sparse. Today, how much of it is left?

Over a year ago, the Sierra Club in the United States released a global map of all large areas of wilderness on earth. It is shocking.

When areas of 400,000 hectares or more that are free of roads are mapped, 23 per cent of the planet is taken over by human beings. But if a third of the earth as wilderness seems like a lot, remember that only 30 per cent of the planet's surface is land and, of that, tropical rainforests where most life forms live, occupy only six percent. And where are most of the untouched areas of land? As you might have guessed, 60 per cent of the wilderness tracts are the most inhospitable for people — the northern areas of Canada, Greenland and the Soviet Union, and the desert band across the Sahel of Africa and in central Australia.

At the WILD conference, Dave Foreman, the founder of Earth First, brought copies of The Big Outside (A Ned Ludd Book, Tucson), which he co-authored with Howie Wolke. The eight-year study is a serious attempt to map all remaining big blocks of wilderness in the 48 southern U.S. states.

The definition of wilderness is a difficult one but in operational terms, it was defined by the absence of roads. A stunning statistic to me was that the furthest distance one can get away from a road in the United States is 21 miles!

The U.S. government defines wilderness as anything over 2,000 hectares but Foreman and Wolke chose to look at blocks above 40,000 hectares west of the Rockies and above 20,000 hectares east of the mountains because from an ecological perspective, bigger is better. It is only in such large tracts that entire watersheds remain intact and where sufficient diversity and the opportunity for gene flow that is so necessary to maintain evolutionary opportunity exist.

The memory of the wilderness paradise that existed only a few centuries ago fills one with sadness — 60 million bison once ranged the prairie grasslands on a scale rivalling the great herds on the Serengeti Plains. Billions of passenger pigeons literally darkened the sky for days on end and cougar, bear, wolves, and elk were plentiful in the vast forests. Today many animals and plants are extinct or exist only in zoos, while animals such as the Florida panther number in dozens. Yet in American public lands, "at least two million acres a year" of wilderness are still disappearing and only about 10 per cent of it is still wild.

Again, the map is a shock. East of the Rockies, the U.S. is like a vast desert where there are only islands of wilderness clustered along the border with Manitoba, in the northeastern corner or near the tip of Florida. West of the Rockies, there are many more spots on the map, but again, most of the states are covered in roads and developed.

Environmentalists fighting to preserve local bits of wilderness, are often portrayed by pro-development forces as "greedy" people who put the environment ahead of jobs and the economy. But the maps tell us all there is very little left.

We are already pushing the incredible fabric of interconnected and diverse life and its support systems to the brink. Do we really think we can kill the goose and create our own golden eggs?

Program to help kids is revised

The Early Identification Program in Haliburton County attempts to identify the strengths and weaknesses of kindergarten students early in the school year by focussing on skills believed to be important in a child's physical, emotional, social/behavioural and intellectual growth. Teachers can modify and provide programs to challenge identified strengths and remediate identified weaknesses.

The Early Identification Program of Kindergarten children has recently been revised by a committee of three teachers. This committee included Marylene Welch, Terry Hartwick and Rosemary Malott.

All children will be in class at least once by the first Monday after Labour Day and regular classes will begin on this day.

(Smaller schools in the county may vary from this procedure slightly). The Early Identification Program will be finished the last day of October.

Assessment will be made through observation done by Kindergarten teachers in the natural setting of the classroom.

Young are often confused with Mergansers males in territorial confrontation, in the spring, when eggs are ready to hatch. The number of short bursts used determines the level of the bird's excitement.

Finally, the "hoot" call is used primarily by flocks in late summer, although sometimes families use it throughout the summer to maintain contact.

Young loons remain a greyish colour until they are three or four years old and old enough to mate. Because of the grey color of immature and wintering loons, they are often confused with the Merganser duck which is a similar shape and color except for a distinct rusty-colored head.

Loons are a conspicuous bird in their summer plumage. With their vivid black and white coloring, bright red eyes and bluish-green "chinstrap" and "necklace", they are difficult to miss. Except when they vanish from the surface leaving nary a ripple in the water.

The fine art of milking a cow was not one of the strong points for most contestants in the Farmers' Olympics at the Haliburton County Fair on August 19. Few teams managed to convince Bessie to give up a cup of milk in this fun-filled event. Other events in the olympics had the teams pushing wheelbarrows full of hay through an obstacle course, egg toss and hay rolling.

Committee identifies key areas of local concern

The following was prepared by Haliburton County's steering committee on long-term health care.

The Steering Committee from its first meeting has attempted to keep the community updated on its activities through press releases and meetings with the press. The planning being conducted by the Steering Committee has been extensive and as a result has required a great deal of time to complete its research and tasks. The purpose of this press release is to update the public about the activities completed.

The purpose of the Haliburton County Directional Plan is to thoroughly investigate the health, housing and social support service needs of Haliburton County. To do this, a number of different initiatives have been undertaken.

Community consultation

As part of the community consultation process for the project a series of meetings was held with representatives from the community ranging from physicians, family caregivers, municipal representatives and service providers. Over 70 people participated in these meetings to identify health, housing and social support service issues in Haliburton County.

Participants suggested improvements to emergency services. They expressed concerns over the lack of community-based mental health and addiction services. More long term care services, both in the community and in institutions were recommended. The need to improve Hyland Crest Senior Citizens Home was identified. Participants stressed the need for increased coordination between health and social services. They questioned the ability of elderly people to remain independent if a transportation system is not developed.

Another component of the community consultation process was a series of open houses organized by the Steering Committee. More than 20 agencies/institutions participated in this initiative to increase awareness of existing services and the options for health, housing and social support services in the County.

pation in the many activities of the committee has helped to broaden the community's involvement in the plan's development.

The Steering Committee wishes to thank the many community agencies who have continued to support its work. Their partici-

Additionally, the Steering Committee wishes to acknowledge the continued public interest in its work and will keep the community updated.

Kinmount

One of the most popular fall attractions in southern Ontario will welcome thousands of visitors this weekend as the gates swing open to the annual Kinmount Fall Fair.

No one is quite sure how "The fair with the Forward Look" became so popular, but whatever magic formula was used, it has proved to be successful year after year. That success annually turns the quiet community of less than a thousand into a Mecca which draws visitors from throughout southern Ontario and beyond.

One of the attributes which has enhanced the attraction is the friendly community atmosphere which prevades the event.

Fall Fair

supervision of Thrill Show Productions.

The feature performer at this year's fair is the 1960's rock star Bobby Curtola. He will be performing Saturday evening starting at 9 p.m..

Other features of this year's fair include a steam show, petting zoo, pig races, Queen of the Fair competition, children's races, livestock shows, amateur contests, horse draws, pet shows and more. Conklin Shows will be providing the midway again this year.

The 1990 edition of the Kinmount Fall Fair opens Friday evening August 31, and continues through Saturday September 1 and Sunday September 2.

Throughout the large fairground, friendly, smiling faces provide a warm welcome to friends and visitors alike.

The fair organizing committee also ensures the program includes something of interest to just about everyone in the family. In addition to the traditional displays of local produce and handiwork, this year's fair includes two car demolition derbies, Friday evening and Sunday afternoon under the

Radio auction winner will see Blue Jays, proceeds will help Ileitis and Colitis

The Victoria/Haliburton chapter of the Canadian Foundation for Ileitis and Colitis is holding its first radio auction on Wednesday, September 5 on CKLY 910 Radio. Bidders can call the Lindsay radio station at 324-9100 anytime between 6 a.m. and 6 p.m. to bid. Updates on the auction will be given throughout the day.

The auction is for a weekend baseball package for September 14 weekend which includes the following: the highest bidder will be picked up on Friday afternoon in a stretch limousine (courtesy of Braidwood Limousine Services of Lindsay) and to be whisked off to the Toronto Skydome. There, you will be met by a representative of the Toronto Blue Jays who will give you a special, exclusive tour of the new Skydome and you will be presented with a Blue Jays gift package. Then, you settle into your seats on the level "100" Esplanade to enjoy the 7:35 p.m. game between the Toronto Blue Jays and the Baltimore Orioles.

After the game, check into the Roehampton Hotel in downtown Toronto where you will be treated to a night's accommodation and a free breakfast Saturday morning (courtesy of the Municipal Trust Company in Lindsay).

Disabled voters will get an assist at the polls

To provide support for physically disabled visually impaired and elderly voters who might not otherwise be able to cast their ballots, there are special provisions in voting procedures for Ontario's 35th Provincial general election.

Qualified electors who are unable to attend a polling place due to disabilities have options other than voting on election day. They may either cast a ballot at an advance poll, or vote by proxy.

Designated advance polls, which provide level access or ramps to accommodate disabled or elderly electors, are scheduled for August 30, September 1 and September 3.

Electors who for medical reasons are physically incapable of attending a polling place may vote by proxy. This permits such an elector to authorize another elector residing in the same electoral district to vote on his or her behalf. An elector may not act as a proxy voter for more than two electors.

Proxy application forms may be obtained from any Elections Ontario office. They must be certified by the Returning Officer in the electoral district where the elector resides. The application form will be exchanged for a certificate to vote which the proxy voter must present at the polling place in order to receive a ballot and vote.

Visually impaired electors may have a friend or one of the poll officials read the candidates' names in the order they appear on the ballot.

To enable these electors to align their ballots face up, a small notch has been cut into the edge of the upper right hand corner of the ballot. Ontario election ballots are printed with the candidates' names appearing alphabetically down the left side with a circle to the right of each name for the elector to indicate his or her choice. A notch has also been cut beside each white circle.

In accordance with the Ontario Election Act, the Deputy Returning Officer may assist such electors in marking their ballot. A provision in the election legislation also allows a friend—under oath—of a visually impaired or disabled elector to assist the elector and accompany that person through the voting process.

In addition, the ballot box may be moved by poll officials to facilitate voting by an elderly or disabled elector.

WHAT WILL YOU DO FOR YOUR RED CROSS?

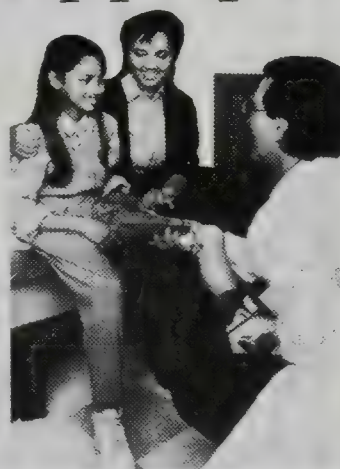

Lottery funds help people with disabilities.

Sharmila lost a leg to cancer when she was six years old. With the help of a prosthetic leg, Sharmila is able to skip and swim with her friends.

Helping people with disabilities is just one way lottery funds are used.

Lottery funds are also used to provide grants in other areas such as sports and recreation, arts and culture, hospitals, and province-wide charities.

Eight year old Darren Lacey had a wonderful experience recently when his Orangeville Lacrosse team, of which he is goalie, won All-Ontario Championships. Darren was thrilled when "the greatest lacrosse player in the world" shook his hand at the end of the game. Darren is a grandson of a very proud Jean Lacey of Minden.

A general Museum Committee meeting will be held August 29 at 10 a.m. at the Minden Library.

Congratulations to the winners at the Stanhope Bridge: Vange Croucher, Margaret Barkwell and Chuck Watters.

The Horticultural Society will meet at Minden Library on September 4 at 7:30 p.m.

August 16 Legion euchre winners included Mary Reesor, George Brown, Don Sinclair, Sharon Brown, Anna Edwards, Emily Winkley, Harvey Partner, Eileen Stiver, Eleanor Pye and Bert Pink. Draw winners included Doreen Powell, Vera Ward, Orval Francis, Dolly Kelly, Casey Wilson, Vivian Anderson and Willard Bridgman.

Staff members at The Times attended the wedding of our staff reporter Jay Kerr-Wilson and his lovely bride Alison on the weekend in Burlington, Ontario.

Club 35 euchre August 20 winners were Olive Jones for 50-50, Olive Daniels, most lone hands, Mary Reesor and June Branning high lady and man and Anna Edwards, Jim Foster and Marion Irwin.

Mrs. Vivian Kernohan was totally surprised on her birthday recently when around 50 family members and friends gathered at the home of her daughter Nila and Jim Graham of Huntsville. All her family, grandchildren, and great grandchildren were present, except Wayne and Barry Barkwell of New Brunswick who could not make it at the last minute. Her grandson Rick Graham flew in Saturday morning from B.C.

A delicious dinner was served, with a birthday cake, balloons, signs and all the trimmings. They enjoyed the evening playing horseshoes, basketball, cards, a swimming pool for the kids and a bonfire later.

Fred and Bess Cox attended the wedding of their friends Rachel and Andrew Sixt in Cambridge last Saturday.

Candidates defend absence at Bobcaygeon debate

The local Conservative and Liberal candidates came under fire Thursday for their refusal to participate in the the Bobcaygeon debate the previous night.

In the only real exchange of Thursday's all candidates meeting in Lindsay, Ron Jenkins and Pat O'Reilly were forced to explain why they did not show up at the debate in Bobcaygeon.

O'Reilly, the Liberal candidate, said he has received requests to attend 12 or 13 such debates in this campaign. Since he felt it is impossible to attend all, he said he discussed it with Jenkins and together they agreed to attend only three.

"We came to an agreement," Jenkins added. The Conservative candidate said his main concern in this campaign is to get out to the people, and that takes time.

Jenkins then turned to NDP candidate Dennis Drainville and said, "We stuck to our agreement."

"There was no agreement for the NDP," Drainville countered. "It's the duty and obligation of the candidate to respond to the public," he said. "A message to the people of the community is that that meeting is not important" to Jenkins or O'Reilly.

Drainville also challenged O'Reilly's statement about the number of invitations. He said he had received only six invitations for debates "and I said yes to all six."

Jenkins then accused

Drainville of trying to use this to his political advantage. Responding to calls from the audience, he said he will come to Bobcaygeon any time they have a gathering of 50 people. Several in the audience responded in unison that he missed his opportunity.

Independent candidate Hugh Boyd had the last word on this question. He said he had learned of the debate only three hours before it was scheduled to begin, yet he managed to attend.

Boyd also commented on Jenkin's and O'Reilly's agreement. "Already I see deals being made between the Liberals and Conservatives."

About 75 people attended Thursday's candidates night at Sir Sandford Fleming College. The meeting was also broadcast on Lindsay's cable television channel.

Representatives of Lindsay's media posed the initial questions to the five candidates during this low-key event. Very few local issues were addressed and it was obvious some candidates had been given the questions ahead of time as they read their answers from prepared notes.

Following the meeting, some expressed disappointment. One woman said the exchange did not help decide who to vote for.

Hi Kids!

Here is another puzzle for you with a word list. Look in the diagram of letters for the words given in the list. Find them by reading up, down, forward, backward and diagonally. They are all in a straight line and do not skip letters. Circle the words in the diagram and cross it off the list.

It's as easy as that. Have fun!

Q: What has a hundred limbs but can't walk?

A: A tree.

Q: Why is a sinking ship like a person in jail?

A: They both need bailing out.

Q: How do you tell an elephant from a Monster?

A: Monsters never remember.

Costumes win first prize at county fair

Senior League

by Winnifred Barnum

Thursday afternoon was tea party time. This one was provided and served by the Minden Lioness Club. They were, Muriel Harrington, George and Edna Moulton, Jean Lacey, Dorothy Boyd, Meta Robertson and Georgina Kernohan. They served us a very delicious lunch which was certainly appreciated, thank you!

Tom McAllister came in the evening to call bingo for us. He has been unable to come for three weeks. We are happy to have him with us again, thank you Tom.

Friday afternoon was Happy Hour. The residents and friends were entertained by Bill Payne, Eldon Deacon, Charlie Hadley and Don Burch whom we sincerely thank. The volunteers on hand to serve at happy hour were Ellen Holden, Mary Guillemine, Dorothy Milne and Rita Lockheart. Many thanks for a job well done.

The Haliburton County Fair parade was held Saturday August 18, 1990. Hyland Crest residents entered the new bus as a thank you to everyone who contributed in any way to obtain this bus. It was decorated like a huge gift package. Lynn Shirley and her friend carried a banner saying "Hyland Crest thanks everyone from the bottom of our hearts". The girls were dressed in big hearts and red wigs. Our administrator Rheta Jones rode in the bus with us. As far as we know, she is the only administrator to go anywhere with us on any bus and we thank her sincerely. We spent a couple of hours at the fair and then went home to delicious muffins and a good cup of tea. To top it off, our two hearts won first prize in the adult class. We thank the volunteers who went with us, Beth and Fred Parker and Rita Lockheart.

Monday evening Dorothy Hunter came to show us movies which were "Walk a while in my shoes" Flipper the Seal" and "High Summer" for which we thank her greatly.

Monday afternoon Tops and Trends and an Avon representative were here.

We are sorry to hear that Stella Stinson is in the Minden hospital and wish her a speedy recovery.

Tuesday afternoon Mary Oliver and I visited the Bowron Homestead. Mary's son Raymond took us. There was a large number of people there and most of them knew Grace Irwin. It wasn't a speech, it was more like a question and answer period, someone would ask a question and she would tell us her experiences concerning it. She spoke of many people she came to know who had been so kind to her and her family through the years. They started by living in a tent and gradually improved until her family bought an island and built a cottage where she is now. The way she related her life in this area certainly held our attention. After Grace Irwin's talk, Raymond Oliver took us to get an ice cream cone and then we went to Sandy Beach on Gull Lake before coming home.

Sunday night chapel service was conducted by Rev. John Burgess. Alice Jones played the organ which helps our singing very much and helps Rev. Burgess very much. We certainly thank them both.

Tuesday morning chapel service was led by Rev. Ed Moll, he accompanied the hymns with his guitar. Thank you very much.

Tuesday afternoon Doris took some of the residents on a bus trip. She had Kathy Gartshore (volunteer) to help her and Gladys Bowman (Health care nursing) also. They visited the home of Helen and Murray Robertson - Lofty Lea at Allsaw. They saw an antique 1930 Ford truck in excellent condition, beautiful flower beds and a working windmill. The home overlooks Lake Kashagawigamog. From there they travelled to Hali-burton, Gooderham and Kinmount and after they stopped for ice cream, Kawartha Dairy treated them then they arrived home.

Sunday May, Roy, Jackie came from Peterborough and took me for a drive and we had our lunch, we had a short visit with Terry and Norma and then they came home with me for dinner.

Stella Stinson has returned from the hospital. We are glad to have her back.

DID YOU KNOW?

In June 1984, as Leader of the Official Opposition, David Peterson promised to restore the provincial share of school costs to 60%. Despite this promise, the provincial share has continued to decline since the Liberal Party formed the government in 1985. The burden of school costs is being borne increasingly by local ratepayers. Property tax is a relatively regressive way to pay for educational services.

Haliburton board teacher wins $7,500 award

John H. Fitzgerald, a teacher with the Haliburton County Board of Education, won this year's $7,500 Win Davies Memorial Scholarship.

The scholastic award is offered annually by the Ontario Public School Teachers' Federation to assist teachers completing doctoral studies.

Fitzgerald will use his award to complete doctoral studies at the University of South Florida.

"I am delighted that OPSTF has been instrumental in helping John Fitzgerald to develop his capacities as an educator, trainer and scholar," Bill Martin, President of OPSTF, told guests at a special luncheon attended by 500 teachers from across the province. The event, held at the Marriott Hotel in Toronto, took place during the Federation's annual assembly.

Currently on leave from the board, Fitzgerald's last teaching position was at Archie Stouffer Elementary School in Minden where he taught kindergarten, grade one and intermediate art. He also served as instructor for professional development credit courses sponsored by the Federation.

Fitzgerald has been actively involved in several Haliburton athletic activities. These include:

convener of Haliburton's Terry Fox Run (1984), coach of the Haliburton Tyke hockey team (1987-88), coach of the Haliburton Secondary Cross Country Ski team (1986-1988) and Co-convener of the Ontario Secondary School Nordic Ski Championships (OFSAA) Haliburton.

The Ontario Public School Teachers' Federation represents 23,000 teachers

Proxy voting applications can be obtained from any Returning Officer in province

Qualified electors who are unable to cast their ballots in person on the days of the advance polls, or on election day may do so by proxy if they fall under certain categories.

Proxy voting is possible for a qualified elector who is a member or spouse or child of a member of the Canadian Forces; employed in the business of long distance transportation; committed to business activities or employer's directions; those physically incapable, because of medical reasons, of attending a polling place; a student duly registered at a recognized educational institution; those participating in a job training or retraining program; or an inmate in a penal or correctional institution.

To vote by proxy, the elector authorizes another qualified elector in the same electoral district to cast the vote. A qualified elector may not act as proxy for more than two electors.

Proxy application forms may be obtained from any Returning Officer throughout the province. The completed form, naming the proxy voter must, however, be certified by the Returning Officer in the electoral district where the person appointing the proxy resides. The deadline for the certification of proxy votes is 8:00 p.m. on September 5, 1990, the day before election day.

Persons eligible to vote in this election are those who, on election day, are 18 years of age or older, a Canadian citizen, and have resided in Ontario for the six month period prior to election day and whose names are on the list of electors or on a certificate to vote in the electoral district where they reside.

Trent-Severn report

On Monday August 13, the Haliburton Lakes of the Trent-Severn Waterway were at 72.5 percent of their maximum storage range, having registered a decline of about 5 percent from the previous week. Rains had improved the levels of the Kawarthas by that time so flow from the reservoirs down the Gull, Burnt, etc., tributaries was reduced to minimum again on Tuesday the 14th.

At 72.5 percent the reservoirs are now only 2.5 percent above the 10-year average of the 1970s for the date, but some 10 percent higher than the levels of 1989. The 1990 average was nearly 16 percent more than in 1988.

Some surplus exists on the Kawarthas, so large amounts of reserve water should be unnecessary for the next week or two.

Acid rain report

The following report on precipitation events was recorded at the Ministry of Environment acid rain testing station in Dorset and compiled by Environment Canada.

This report covers the period of August 12 to August 18.

August 12, 2 mm rain, 4.2 pH, from southern Ontario.

August 13, 2 mm rain, 4.3 pH, from northern Ontario.

August 14, 1 rain, 4.7 pH, from Wisconsin, northern Michigan and Lake Huron.

August 15, 1 mm rain, 3.6 pH from Michigan and southern Ontario.

Environmental damage is usually observed in sensitive areas regularly receiving precipitation with pH less than 4.7. Readings of 4.0 pH or less are considered dangerous. The lower the reading, the more acidic the precipitation.

Plan helps potential homeowners save money

The Ontario Home Ownership Savings Plan (OHOSP) is an Ontario Government housing initiative to assist first time home buyers to save toward a down payment.

Individuals or couples with low or moderate incomes can earn interest on their savings and be eligible for a tax credit of 25% of eligible contributions. This means up to $500 individual; and $1000 per couple in OHOSP credits, each year for up to five years.

To be eligible applicants must be a resident of Ontario, 18 years of age or older, have a valid Social Insurance Number, have never owned an eligible home anywhere and never previously had an Ontario Home Ownership Savings Plan.

Details and application forms are available at financial institutions throughout the province or you can call the Ministry of Revenue at their toll-free number 1-800-263-7965 for further information. Device for the Deaf, 1-800-263-7776.

The Haliburton County Information Centre is a local organization staffed by two full-time personnel and volunteers. We help you find solutions to social, health, governmental and environmental problems by either providing information or by referring enquiries to the appropriate service. In Haliburton, the centre is open Monday - Friday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. or call 457-2733. The satellite office in Minden is open Monday and Tuesday 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. or call 286-4100.

If you live outside the toll-free area, please call collect.

Long drives put strain on drivers and make accidents more likely

The Ontario Provincial Police is encouraging safe and attentive driving during this last holiday weekend of summer.

Sgt. Bob Lyon says the usual heavy volume of traffic, particularly on roadways leading to and from recreation areas, puts a strain on drivers.

"Reaction time is lessened when a person has been behind the wheel for more than an hour", says

Lyon, provincial traffic programs coordinator. "And if a driver is distracted at all, that's another reason to pull off the highway for a break."

Statistics indicate between 11 and 19 people died and more than 500 were injured in accidents investigated by the OPP during each of the past three Labour Day weekends.

"I encourage motorists to allow sufficient time for their trip and to resist the desire to make up for lost time by passing other vehicles when it is not clearly safe to do so."

He says his goal is to reduce the number of accidents this holidays weekend. "Speed, alcohol, drugs and failure to buckle up continue to be contributing factors in most fatal accidents around the province."

HALIBURTON FAMILY VIOLENCE MEN'S GROUP

In Haliburton, there is a group counselling program to assist men, at no cost to them, in dealing with behaviours that physically, mentally or emotionally hurt the ones they love. This is a confidential service that does not judge or condemn, but helps you and those around you live a less troubled life. For information, referral and support, leave a message at 457-1088. tfn.
